Opportunities

Equity in Infrastructure Investment

Empowering Urban Service District Residents

Support Mixed-Income, Mixed-Use Urban Communities

Infrastructure Investment

How Did We Get Here?

In 1960, Jacksonville was already an urban environment with mixed density. Nearly 200,000 residents lived in Urban Services District One, the Urban Core, with a population density (over 6,000ppl/sq mile) greater than Birmingham or Los Angeles and more in line with Indianapolis, Cincinnati, or St. Paul MN

Infrastructure Investment didn't follow equitably to population after consolidation:

- Road Management disproportionally directed to increasingly larger areas to create parity;
- Lighting and public safety improvements initially focused on suburban-areas;

These active decisions further incentivized decentralization and development on the boundaries, where the infrastructure was more expensive to maintain, creating a cycle.

How We Can Correct That Disparity

Set Structural Guidance on Investment

Improvement Budget for Urban Services District One equal to Develop an Infrastructure Set Aside in the Capital 44.1% of the previous year's CIP total.

Restrict the use of those dollars to:

- Projects within Urban Services District One and zoned for General Commercial Low-, Medium-, or High-Density Residential or Community
- Municipal Streets & Municipal Street Drainage Projects

Empowering Residents

Community Benefits Agreements

What is a Community Benefits Agreement?

A Community Benefits Agreement (CBA) is a project-specific agreement between a developer and a broad community coalition that details the project's contributions to the community and ensures community support for the project.

What is a Community Benefits Policy?

A community benefits policy is any policy adopted by a local government that requires community benefits on projects undertaken by the government or by a private developer. Common examples include living wage, local hiring, and affordable housing requirements for subsidized development.

What is a Multi-Parcel Standard? Or a Community Benefits Standard?

Local governments can proactively guide future growth by applying community benefits principles to large parcels of land slated for development or that seek to change their use from what the city had previously determined. If the land is government-owned or developed under an agreement with the local government, officials can incorporate community benefits into requests for proposals.

CBAs have an over 20-year track record of aligning the interests of neighborhood residents, government, and for-profit developers to allow the market to be a strong comp

$275 Million Project on the Nashville Fairground Site and development of proximate parcels for supportive mixed-uses – housing, retail, hotel, and entertainment.

CBA Completed in 2018 in parallel with the city rezoning the 10 acres of mixed-use development.

When Should We Mandate CBAs?

When Public Property is Being Developed.

Whether through transfer of public property by government or quasi-governmental entities, or land-leasing of parcels for development

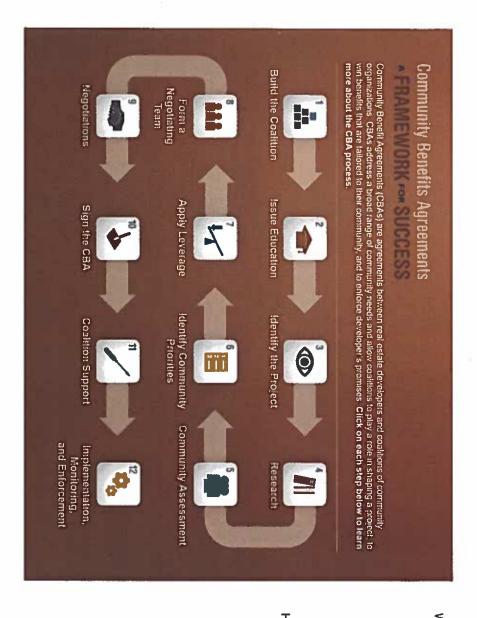

When Public Financing is Sought for Private Benefit

When Agreed-upon Zoning is Being Changed

Zoning sets the baseline for what a community agrees should exist in their neighborhood. Any change through a Planned Unit Development or similar variance impacts that balance.

Community Benefits Agreements Aren't Easy

What are the inputs needed for this strategy?

Community Organizing and Coalition Building

A Community Benefits Agreement (CBA) is a projectspecific agreement between a developer and a broad community coalition that details the project's contributions to the community and ensures community support for the project.

How do we build these inputs?

A community benefits policy is any policy adopted by a local government that requires community benefits on projects undertaken by the government or by a private developer. Common examples include living wage, local hiring, and affordable housing requirements for subsidized development.
